Two Norwich musicians in Hartford Friday night had a nerve racking experience as the result of the Shannon building fire. With a room on the seventh floor of a hotel, one of them who had evidently been dreaming of the big fire, woke up suddenly and, seeing a red glow over the door, shouted fire and roused his roommate by trying to pull down the door. He turned the key around three or four times, but the door wouldn't budgs. "What's the matter?" yelled the companion. "The house ig on fire," howled the man trying to get out. This brought the second one out of bed, and the advice that it was necessary to pull the boit to get out was given. This was done and fight in through the imaginary smoke, the terrible comfigration was before them, almost in front of their door. There was a red light in the hall.
